- Consumers should discard the products and not consume them.
- CFS will remain vigilant and monitor for any new development and take appropriate actions when necessary.
- Investigation by CFS is ongoing.
- Campylobacter spp. contain different species and subspecies, of which the most frequently reported in human disease is C. jejuni, and less commonly C. coli. These and the other campylobacters are widely distributed in most warm-blooded animals such as poultry, cattle, pigs, sheep and dogs. The most common symptoms of Campylobacter infection include diarrhoea, which may be watery or sticky and can contain blood, abdominal pain, fever, headache, nausea, and/or vomiting. Food poisoning caused by C. jejuni generally lasts for 2-10 days.
